Children and Dogs: Important Information for Parents

Living with a pet can be beneficial to children. Pets can enhance a child's self-esteem, teach responsibility and help them to learn empathy. However, children and dogs are not always going to automatically start off with a wonderful relationship. Parents must be willing to teach the dog and the child acceptable limits of behavior in order to make their interactions pleasant and safe.

Selecting A Dog

What age is best? Many people have a "warm fuzzy" image of a puppy and a child growing up together. If you have a young child and are thinking of adopting a puppy (less than one-year-old) there are a few things you need to consider.

- Time and energy: Puppies require a lot of time, patience, training and supervision. They also require socialization in order to become well-adjusted adult dogs. This means they need to be taken places and exposed to new things and new people. If you have a young child who already requires a lot of care and time, will you have enough time to care for a puppy, as well?
- Safety: Puppies, because they are babies, are somewhat fragile creatures. A puppy may become frightened, or even injured, by a well-meaning, curious child who wants to constantly pick him up, hug him, or explore his body by pulling in his tail or ears.
- Rough play: Puppies have sharp teeth and claws, with which they may inadvertently injure a small child. Puppies also tend to jump up on small children and knock them down. All interactions between your child and puppy will need to be closely supervised in order to minimize the chances of either being injured.
- Advantages of getting an adult dog: Adult dogs require less time and attention once they've adjusted to your family and household routine, although you still need to spend time helping your new dog with the transition to his new home. You can better gauge how hardy and tolerant an adult dog will be of childish enthusiasm and you can work with your local animal shelter to adopt a dog with a history of getting along well with children. Generally, if your child is under six years old, it is best to adopt a dog that is over two years old. Although puppies can be a lot of fun, and it's exciting and rewarding to help them grow into wonderful companions, they do require significantly more time to train and supervise than an adult dog.

What breed is best? Although some general statements can be made about specific dog breeds, the characteristics of an individual dog are just as important as a dog's breed. Remember when considering a dog's breed that these descriptions are mere generalizations and that dogs differ on an individual basis.

► Size: Small breeds of dogs, such as toy or Miniature Poodles, Chihuahuas, or Cocker Spaniels, may not be good choices for a young child. These small breed dogs are more easily injured than larger dogs and may be more easily frightened by a lot of activity, loud noises and by being picked up and fondled frequently. Frightened dogs tend to snap or bite in order to protect themselves. Larger dogs may be better able to tolerate the activity, noise and rough play that is an inevitable part of living with children.

► Breed type: Some of the sporting breeds, such as Labradors and Golden Retrievers, have traditionally been considered good pets for families with children. Breeds that have been selected for protective behavior, such as Chows and Rottweilers, may not be as good for families with children. It is sometimes difficult for this type of dog to comfortably tolerate the many comings and goings of children and their friends, who may be perceived as territorial intruders. Herding breeds are inclined to "herd" children, chasing and nipping at their heels.

► Remember: Dog breed descriptions are mere generalizations and that dogs differ on an individual basis. There are some individual Rottweilers that are great with children and some Labs that are only suitable for homes without kids.

Who will care for the Dog?

It's unrealistic to expect a child, regardless of age, to have sole responsibility for caring for a dog. Not only do dogs need basic things like food, water and shelter, they also need to be played with, exercised and trained on a consistent basis. Teaching a dog the rules of the house and helping him become a good companion is too overwhelming a task for a young child. Even responsible teenagers may not be willing to spend an adequate amount of time with the dog when their desires to be with their friends usually take over at this age. If you're adopting a dog "for the kids," you must be prepared and willing to be the dog's caretaker.

Starting Off Right

Following are some guidelines to help you start on the right foot. Remember, small children should never be left alone with a dog or puppy without adult supervision.

Holding:

- It's safest for both child and puppy if your child is sitting down whenever he wants to hold the puppy. Puppies are squirmy and wiggle and may easily fall out of a young child's arms and get injured. If held insecurely, a puppy may become frightened and snap or scratch in response. After your child is sitting, you can place the puppy in his arms.
- Have your child offer the puppy a chew toy while he pets the puppy. When puppies are teething, they tend to chew on everything, including hand and arms, so having a chew toy handy will divert the puppy's teeth away from your child. An added benefit is that the puppy will come to associate pleasant consequences (getting a treat) with being held by your child.
- For larger dogs, have your child sit in your lap and let the dog approach both of you. This way you can control your child and not allow him to get "carried away" with pats that are too rough. You are also there to teach your new dog to treat your child gently.*

Petting and Giving Affection: Children often want to hug dogs around the neck. Your dog may view this as a threatening gesture, rather than an affectionate one, and may react with a growl, snap or bite. You should teach your child to pet your dog from underneath the dog's chin, rather than hugging him or reaching over his head. You should also teach your child to avoid staring at, or looking directly into, your dogs' eyes.

Giving Treats: Children tend to become somewhat fearful and anxious when a dog tries to take a treat from their hand. This causes them to jerk their hand away at the last second. The dog may then jump up or lunge to get the treat, which may result in the child being knocked down. Have your child place the treat in an open palm, rather than holding it in his fingers. You may want to place your hand underneath your child's to help guide him.

Supervising Play: Children move with quick, jerky movements, have high-pitched voices and often run, rather than walk. All of these behaviors somewhat resemble the behavior of prey animals. Almost all of a dog's play behaviors are based on predatory behavior. Consequently, your dog may respond to your child's behavior by chasing him, nipping at his heels, jumping up at him or even trying to knock him down.

At first, your child may need to play quietly around your new dog until he becomes more comfortable and calm and your child has gained more control over the dog. Your dog must also learn certain behaviors on his part are unacceptable, but he must also be taught what behaviors are the right ones. Out handout: "Dealing with Normal Puppy Behavior: Nipping and Rough Play" outlines procedures for discouraging rough play and encouraging appropriate play. However, most children under the age of ten are not capable of carrying out these procedures, so it is helpful to teach your dog a "leave it" command that you can use when play gets too rough. Taking an obedience class together is a good way to teach your dog to respond to commands.

An approach that is not helpful is to punish your dog for his behavior. If he learns that being around children always results in "bad things" happening to him, he may become defensive in their presence.

Possessions: Your dog will not know the difference between his toys and your child's toys unless you teach him.

- Your child must take responsibility for keeping his playthings out of your dog's reach.
- If, and only if, you catch your dog chewing on something he shouldn't, interrupt the behavior by calling him away with an enthusiastic, high pitched voice and hand clapping, then give him an acceptable chew toy and praise him lavishly when he takes the toy in his mouth.
- Don't give your dog objects to play with such as old socks, old shoes, or old children's toys that closely resemble items that are off-limits. They can't tell the difference between your kids' old sneakers and your Manolos.
- Dogs can be possessive about their food, toys and space. Although it is normal for a dog to growl or snap to protect these items, it's not acceptable. At the same time, children need to learn to respect the dog as a living creature that is not to be teased or purposefully hurt and who needs time to himself.
